UPDATE: Comal River Closure - Monday

New Braunfels, Texas — River conditions on the Comal River in New Braunfels have recovered considerably following Sunday's heavy rains. However, a large amount of debris remains in the waterway. Clean-up by city crews has been underway since early this morning and will continue throughout the day.

Therefore, the Comal River will remain closed to recreation through 1pm today. At that point, the condition of the river will be reevaluated and a determination will be made about when/if the river can be reopened. Another release will be sent this afternoon once that determination is made.
